

1.0 Setting up an Organisation

Charitable Status

Overview

- 1. Introduction
- 2. What is a Charity?
- 3. Must a Charity Register With the Charity Commission?
- 4. What Are the Benefits of Being a Registered Charity?
- 5. Why Do Charities Have to Register?
- 6. What Kind of Legal Structure Should a Charity Have?
- 7. Getting to Grips With the Jargon
- 8. Further Advice

Introduction

This information sheet provides guidance on the topic of charitable status in relation to the following areas:

- •The legal definition of a charity
- Registering with the Charity
 Commission
- The different types of legal structures that are used by charities.

Image: People holding hands around a globe

What is a Charity?

The Charities Act 2011 legally defines a charity as an organisation that exists:

- For exclusively charitable purposes, andIs for the public benefit (i.e. not for private gain).

The Act also defines a 'charitable purpose' as one that falls within the following list of descriptions of purposes:

- The prevention or relief of poverty
- The advancement of education
- The advancement of religion
- The advancement of health or the saving of lives
- •The advancement of citizenship or community development
- The advancement of the arts, culture, heritage or science
- The advancement of amateur sport
- •The advancement of human rights, conflict resolution or reconciliation or the promotion of religious or racial harmony or equality and diversity
- •The advancement of environmental protection or improvement
- The relief of those in need by reason of youth, age, ill-health, disability, financial hardship or other disadvantage
- The advancement of animal welfare
- •The promotion of the efficiency of the armed forces of the Crown; or the efficiency of the police, fire and rescue services or ambulance services, and:
- •Any other purposes charitable in law.

Each item listed is a description or 'head' of charity rather than a fully-stated charitable purpose in itself. The last category means that everything which is currently considered charitable is included, and it allows the Courts to introduce new charitable purposes as they arise.

In addition to showing that the organisation will pursue one or more charitable purposes, every charity must have regard to the Charity Commission's guidance and demonstrate how it is going to deliver public benefit.

What Other Conditions Are There?

- •All the aims and objectives (the 'objects') set out in a charity's governing document must be exclusively charitable. These are the primary purposes of the charity. A charity cannot have a mixture of charitable and non-charitable objects.
- A charity must only pursue activities that further its primary purposes.
- •A charity can only pursue campaigning and political activities in a limited way, and only if it directly furthers its charitable purposes
- •A charity cannot trade on a substantial or regular basis simply for the purpose of raising funds, but it may trade in the course of carrying out of a primary purpose of the charity.
- •A charity's governing document must have a dissolution clause to ensure that if the charity closes down its remaining assets will be passed to another organisation devoted to similar charitable purposes.
- •The charity can only apply its assets in the furtherance of its objects and cannot otherwise distribute them for the personal benefit of trustees (unless authorised under the governing document or by the Charity Commission), or private profit of third parties.

Related Guidance

Charitable Purposes and Public Benefit

Must a Charity Register With the Charity Commission?

A charity is required by law to register with the Charity Commission if it:

- Has an annual income of £5000 or more
- Is based in England or Wales

Small charities below this threshold are not required to register, and there are separate charity regulators for those based in Scotland and Northern Ireland. Just because a small charity isn't registered doesn't make it any less of a charity, it simply means it can only be referred to as a charity rather than a 'registered' charity. It still has to abide by general charity law though, and falls under the jurisdiction of the Charity Commission.

Important Information

All charities that are set up as Charitable Incorporated Organisations (CIOs) are required to register with the Charity Commission whatever their annual income. CIOs only come into legal existence when they are registered by the Commission.

Exempt and Excepted Charities

Some charities are not required to register with the Charity Commission, as they are classed as being 'exempt' or 'excepted'.

- Exempt charities: are charities that are overseen by a regulator other than the Charity Commission (e.g. the Financial Services Authority or Housing Corporation)
- Excepted charities: some charities of certain types are excepted from registering if their income is below a particular threshold (e.g. some religious charities, Boy Scout and Girl Guide charities and some charitable funds of the armed forces)

The Charity Commission has more detailed information about both exempt and excepted charities on their website if you would like to find out more.

Related Guidance

Set Up a Charity Step-by-Step

What Are the Benefits of Being a Registered Charity?

- •It is good for public confidence in the organisation, as being registered with the Charity Commission and having a charity number is often seen as a sign of trustworthiness and that you are benefiting the public.
- •Some funding bodies and private donors only give to registered charities.
- •Mandatory 80% relief on business rates, with a discretionary further 20% so that some local authorities may give as much as 100% relief to charities.
- Tax relief
 e.g. income tax, corporation tax, capital gains tax, stamp duty and VAT concessions.
- It may be easier to attract volunteers.
- Being able to recover tax already paid by donors who contribute through Gift Aid, covenants, or payroll deductions.

Why Do Charities Have to Register?

Because charity law requires charities to be established for the public benefit, charity trustees (i.e. the governing body) must be seen to be publicly accountable.

They are responsible for money and property donated by others for specific charitable purposes, and charities enjoy fiscal benefits which impact on public funds such as tax reliefs (as above).

What About Organisations Whose Purposes Are Partly but Not Wholly Charitable?

If the organisation wants charitable status, it must cease its non-charitable activities as a charity can only be registered if its purposes are wholly charitable.

In such a situation the organisation would need to decide whether the benefits of charitable status are worth doing this, or alternatively it could set up a separate/subsidiary organisation to carry out any non-charitable activities (e.g. trading).

What If a Charity Wants to Trade to Raise Funds for Its Work?

A charity can trade if the trade is in furtherance of, or ancillary to, its objects. This is known as 'primary purpose trading'. Any non-charitable substantial trading (there is an exemption for small scale trading) should be carried out via a separate non-charitable trading company. The profits of the trade can be passed back to the charity in a tax-efficient way.

What Kind of Legal Structure Should a Charity Have?

A charity's legal structure is quite separate from its charitable status. 'Charitable status' refers to whether an organisation is a registered charity or not, but that organisation could have one of a number of legal structures. Voluntary organisations will most commonly have chosen to adopt one of the following legal structures:

- An unincorporated association
- A company limited by guarantee
- A trust

Charitable Incorporated Organisations (CIOs)

The Charities Act 2006 also introduced a new legal structure, the Charitable Incorporated Organisation ('CIO'), which became available in December 2012. This is an incorporated structure designed specifically for charities which is solely regulated by the Charity Commission, therefore doing away with the need for dual reporting to both the Commission and Companies House.

The structure is available as a Foundation (trustees are the only members) and an Association (wider membership) CIO. The model has proved very popular and the majority of new charity registrations are now CIOs. If you are thinking about registering as a CIO, please be aware that the charity will not exist legally until it is registered with the Commission.

Further details of a variety of legal structures, including those mentioned above, see information sheet:

1.5 Choosing Legal Structures

Related Guidance

Change Your Charity Structure

How Can We Make Sure That Our Governing Document Will Be Acceptable to the Charity Commission?

For guidance, please see the Charity Commission's model governing documents, which include:

- Memorandum and Articles of Association for a charitable company (GD1)
- Model trust deed for a charitable trust (GD2)
- Constitution for an unincorporated association (GD3)
- Association or foundation model constitution for a CIO
- Constitution for a small charity

Some large national charities produce a standard governing document approved by the Charity Commission that can be used by organisations associated with that charity.

External Link

The Charity commission provide a list of these organisations on their website:

List of organisations with approved governing documents

We Want to Become a Company Limited by Guarantee and a Registered Charity, Which Should We Do First?

Currently all companies must register with Companies House, whereas charities must register with the Charity Commission. However, the Charity Commission cannot register an organisation that does not formally exist, so you must register as a company limited by guarantee first - but make sure your governing document is acceptable to the Charity Commission before doing so (such as one of their models).

NB: If you are looking to set up an organisation as a CIO, you will only have to register with the Charity Commission rather than with them and Companies House (see above).

When You Are Ready to Register

Visit the Charity Commission website and read the guidance on How to Register a Charity. It is very important that you read the guidance before starting your application because mistakes on applications can result in long delays or even in the application being rejected.

If you have questions or concerns about charity registration, or your application, you can contact your Country Voluntary Council (CVC) for guidance.

External Link

Find your local Country Voluntary Council: Find your CVC

Getting to Grips With the Jargon

Charitable Objects

This is another term for your charity's purposes, or aims and objectives, within which you must operate.

Trustees

Section 97 of the Charities Act 1993 defines trustees as 'persons having the general control and management of the administration of a charity'.

These are typically full voting member of the governing body who may be called a variety of names including: managing trustees, committee members, governors or directors.

NB: if someone is on the governing body of an organisation that is also a company, they will be classed legally as a director of that company (under company law) as well as being a trustee in charity law.

Governing Document

Any document that sets out the charity's purposes and, usually, how it is to be administered. It may be called a trust deed, constitution, memorandum and articles of association, and less typically a will, conveyance, Royal Charter, or Scheme of the Charity Commissioners.

The type of governing document used to set up an organisation is usually dictated by the legal structure chosen for that organisation.

Limited Liability

In most cases the directors (governing body members) of a charitable company (or CIO) are protected from personal liability to third parties (but can still be held personally liable to the company/charity for breaches of trust and company law), and the company is only liable for debts to the amount of its available assets. This will include the paid up amount of the members' guarantee payments (see below).

For more information on limited liability, see Information Sheet: 5.7 Liability of Trustees and Governing Body Members

Company Limited by Guarantee

The members of a company guarantee to pay a fixed amount in the event that the company calls up the guarantee or winds up, and this is usually a nominal sum between £1 and £10 pounds. Unlike a company limited by shares, no profits are distributed to the members but they can vote at general meetings. This is the normal company structure used in the third sector.

Charitable Incorporated Organisation (CIO)

A CIO is an incorporated structure that was designed specifically for charities, and it has a Constitution rather than a Memorandum and Articles of Association (which is used by company structures). Its principal office must be in England or in Wales, and it must have one or more members. Limited liability applies to CIOs in the same way that it applies to companies limited by guarantee (see above).

A CIO may have a body of members distinct from its charity trustees (an "association CIO") or its charity trustees and members may be the same people (a "foundation CIO").

External Link

Model constitutions for both of these forms are available on the Charity Commission website:

Charity Commission - Model Constitions

Unincorporated Association

A group of people who come together for a common purpose and agree to be bound by a set of rules typically known as a 'Constitution'.

Such organisations are not considered a distinct legal entity in their own right, and thus do not enjoy limited liability as incorporated organisations do.

Trust

A trust is a legal structure that arises where property is vested in a person or persons called the trustees, and which those trustees are obliged to hold for the benefit of other persons called beneficiaries.

The interests of the beneficiaries will usually be laid down in a Trust Deed which creates the trust. Trusts are not considered a distinct legal entity in their own right and thus do not enjoy limited liability as incorporated organisations do.

Further Advice

Charity Commission for England & Wales Tel: 0845 3000 218

https://www.gov.uk/government/organisations/charity-commission

Companies House

Tel: 0303 1234 500

https://www.gov.uk/government/organisations/companies-house

Third Sector Support Wales is a network of support organisations for the whole of the third sector in Wales.

It consists of the 19 local and regional support bodies across Wales, the County Voluntary Councils (CVCs) and the national support body, Wales Council for Voluntary Action (WCVA).

For further information contact https://thirdsectorsupport.wales/contact/

Disclaimer

The information provided in this sheet is intended for guidance only. It is not a substitute for professional advice and we cannot accept any responsibility for loss occasioned as a result of any person acting or refraining from acting upon it.